

our familys Pesach Haggadah

Old traditions; new perspectives. Ancient techniques; modern sensibilities. Compiled for my family and friends, this modern haggadah includes English text as well as Hebrew blessings and transliterations. It has developed each few years since my children were young and is still a work in progress as it tries to help us find where it is that we fit into our people's continuing story. The entire Pesach story, as told in traditional haggadot, is a series of Do You Knows? moments: Do You Know you were once a slave in Egypt? Do You Know what happened at the Sea of Reeds? Do You Know what it means that we, too, were once strangers? Do You Know what it means to fight for freedom? Do You Know what it means to remember? But memory, not personal memory nor communal memory, is a static deposit. We all re-remember, we re-tell and we re-cast our past in light of our changing experiences. Despite a plethora of media now available, oral history still remains the single most important and most effective tool to transmit one generation's experiences, memories and dreams to the next. At Pesach, Jews the world over remember an ancient journey and try to relate it to our personal journeys. There are many kinds of journeys: from place to place, from one time to another, from trying to forget to choosing to remember. Memory is what shapes and teaches us. We must remember and we must understand. At Pesach, we're called to a radical act of empathy.

At Pesach, we embark on a time-honoured and perennial attempt to give human life â€œ all human life â€œ dignity. Pesach is about remembering a shared past and about pursuing a shared future of dignity for all.
