

The Basin and Monica, Two Short Stories

The Basin begins with two friends that travel from Salt Lake to a small box canyon located in the Deep Creek Mountain Range on the west side of the West Desert of Utah. After camping one day in this canyon they decide to break camp, take their jeep and up over a ridge and into a basin that is known to hold the headwaters of the creek that flows into the box canyon where they initially camped. While camping several days in the basin, a large box canyon only accessible foot, horseback or jeep-like vehicle, they encounter a number of mysterious clues to the basin's legacy. Monica chronicles several years of a man's and a woman's lives beginning in the man's youth when he sees and falls for a young Puerto Rican woman that lives in the mining town where he is working at the time. During the next year or so he meets the woman, attempts unsuccessfully to gain a relationship her, but then gives up and his life goes on through a marriage to another woman, raising a family, his divorce from her and what he does in the late years of his life. Then in late middle life quite by accident while the man is on a consulting assignment out of state when he finds this now mature Puerto Rican woman working in a restaurant in the town he is residing in for his consulting work. They reconnect, this time more successful than before, in an attempt to restore what never culminated many years earlier.
