Excerpt from Retrospect of Western Travel, Vol. 2 of 2
At seven we were summoned to supper, and obtained a view of the company in whose society we were to pass the next ten days. There was a great mixture. There was a physician from New-york, with his wife and a friend or two an ultra-exclusive party. There were Mr. And Mrs. B., also from New-york, amiable elderly people, with some innocent peculiarities, and showing themselves not the less mindful of other people from taking great care of each other. There was the party that had kept the captain waiting, some Of them very agreeable; and the L.s, whom it would have been a privilege to meet anywhere. There were long trains of young men, so many as to extinguish all curiosity as to>About the Publisher
