

Protect Your Money Book 8. Tax Guide

First off, let me preface this chapter by saying that all tax laws are tentative, changing like the wind so although the information I provide here was current at the time, it may not be now so double check anything you read here. Everybody hates taxes but its the law so you might as well do it and do it right to bypass the alternative; auditing and heavy penalties. Once you learn the system, take some notes and you got it for life. Generally, the IRS requires that you file a tax return by April 15 of each year unless you request an extension in writing. Save and categorize all of your deductions throughout the year so that you will be organized and ready to file when the time comes. You could fill out your own tax returns to save a few bucks but hiring a professional may save you thousands because they know all the loopholes and deductions. Filing incorrectly can bring trouble regardless of whether its intentional or via ignorance. The more accurate and on time your return is, the least likely you will be audited. The best way to take the deductions youre entitled to is to learn the system yourself, do your own taxes and then possibly get them looked over by an expert after. Most preparers dont know what you do and what youre entitled to unless you tell them and you dont know unless you learn the system so do it for yourself. The IRS has five filing categories: Single. Unmarried, legally separated under a decree of divorce or a separate, maintenance contract and (after a time) widowed. Married filing jointly. You and your spouse report your incomes on one tax return. You are both required to sign the return. Married filing separately. Occasionally used by married couples to reduce the total amount of tax liability. Generally, you and your spouse file separate returns and are each responsible for your own taxes. Head of household. Special status that is taxed at a lower rate. To qualify, generally you must be single (although some married persons who live apart may qualify) and be responsible for more than half the upkeep of a home where a qualifying dependant resides. Qualifying widow with dependent child. Special reclassification where if your spouse died in either of the preceding two tax years (and not the tax year of the return) and you have a dependent child and meet certain other requirements, you may qualify. Everyone must file the basic tax form 1040 (or 1040EZ or 1040A). You must include additional forms depending on the type and amount of income earned and deductions taken. Consider the lists below: 1040 EZ. You may be able to use this form if you are single or married filing jointly, you have no dependents, you and your spouse are under 65 and not blind, your taxable income (which can only be from certain sources) is less than $50,000, your earned interest is less than $400 and you do not itemize deductions. 1040A. You may be able to use this form if your taxable income is less than $50,000 and you do not itemize deductions. 1040. Everyone can use this form to report all types of income. Generally, you must use this form if your taxable income is greater than $50,000. The 1040 is also the form used when you itemize your deductions instead of taking the standard deduction (which is generally the amount the government allows each person to claim instead of itemizing deductions). The amount of the standard deduction changes annually and is listed in the tax form booklets. The following is a list of the schedules most commonly used with the 1040: Schedule A (itemize deductions) Schedule B (report taxable interest or dividends in excess of $400) Schedule C or C-EZ (report profit or loss from a business) Schedule D (report capital gains and losses) Schedule E (report supplemental income and losses) Schedule EIC (claim earned income tax credit)
