Emotions run high around the issue of Islamic veiling of women. Harsh voices call for bans in Europe and the US while women are beaten and worse for not wearing full covering in other parts of the world. This article presents the thoughts and perspectives of 14 women from around the world with personal experience of wearing Islamic veiling. These diverse women, all living now in the U.S., speak out. They are variously inspired, pressured, passionate and ambivalent about covering. An Afghani grandmother decries covering while choosing to cover. An uncovered woman asks for strength to cover and another woman rebels by removing her face veil against her husband's wishes. Another woman deemed insufficiently covered abroad is pelted with pebbles. Offered here is a sampling of voices of women sharing their thoughts and experiences, many with accompanying photographs. Boylan stands back and lets the women's voices take the fore.
