

A Diary Too Late

This is the autobiography of David Williams and the story of an expatriate. Now nearly blind, all proceeds of this book are for the Blind Veterans UK who have helped David with his now deteriorating eyesight and along with Obsidian Publishing have now produced this book. David Williams was born in Swindon, Wilts, in November 1947. The book includes stories from his life working in countries such as Ceylon, Libya, Cyprus, Iran, America, Algeria, Saudi Arabia and Thailand. In mid-1948, David found himself with his mother and elder sister, Helen, on a troopship en-route to the far eastern island of Ceylon (now Sri-Lanka). His father, a meteorologist attached to the Royal Air Force had gone on ahead by flying-boat and was there to meet them at Colombo. The family spent five years there before returning to England for a few years. A two-year visit to Libya followed in the 1960s. David joined the R.A.F. in 1965, spent two and a half years stationed in Cyprus before being seriously injured and was discharged in 1972. After a short time with the National Health Service, David found himself based in Iran managing several aviation warehouses. Two other jobs in Iran followed before his wife and he were to end up running a ranch in Florida. Work in Libya, Algeria, Saudi Arabia and Thailand then followed as did visits to a number of countries. He finally and reluctantly returned to England where he has worked with handicapped people, been a taxi driver and a cellar man. Due his old injuries he retired at the age of sixty-two. He lives with his wife and crazy cat in Avebury, Wiltshire.
