

The Danish Cowboy: a true story 1923-1981

My grandfather was Max Schafranek Schmidt. He was born in Copenhagen in 1903 and at the age of 19 went in search of adventure, and found it in Canada. He was a true cowboy, a rancher, farmer, a hunter, a saddle and bridle maker, broke bucking horses and made pastures, was thrown into jail during the Mexican Revolution, dug ditches, built log cabins and put up fences, proudly served in the R.C.A.F. in WW 2, was a weatherman, played the violin, was a good card player, loved nature and the outdoors, loved dancing the night away, was an artist and painter, loved laughing and made everyone laugh. And I've never known anyone who loved food the way he did - he lived to eat and always appreciated a good meal. He was in my eyes a real cowboy gentleman. Here is an epigraph of his love of the wild west - "I came to this country 50 years too late. The history book of Western Canada was closing its chapter on one of the most colourful eras the west had ever seen, to my way of thinking.

The big prairies and rolling hills of western Alberta with its lush bunchgrass or prairie wool as we call it, was being ploughed up and farmers were moving in with the railroad that was stretching from coast to coast. The big grazing leases were being taken up by farmers and the big cow outfits were moving out, leaving just a few big ranches in the south and in the foothills. The horse was still king of the ranches and farms, but tractors were beginning to pop up here and there, and with it, the old roundups were coming to an end. The old roundup was a very colourful event with chuck wagons, tents, riders and lots of bucking in the morning, and that was before you started out to round up the cattle. I can remember the smell of smoke from the branding irons and the noise of calves bawling. The men of that time were mostly strong and rugged and earnest - you had to be - as that was the law of the land. I was on one of the last roundups, and that was to me, the very best event I've ever been to. So I must say, I have been a very lucky Dane in Canada. Or should I say, a very lucky Canadian Dane. Boy, oh boy!
