

Deconsecrating Myself

This book is something like a stream of consciousness journal written during the process of intentionally leaving religion after a career in ministry. "Stream of consciousness", you may be aware, is a literary term that means "unedited, pretentious and often unreadable crap, usually written while people are drunk or high". So, fair warning. That said, it's not totally worthless, I think. Maybe someone out there will be interested to read some thoughts on how to cope with the loss of meaning, belief, and community that happens when you leave behind religion? There's a bit in here about running, too, if you're into that sort of thing, as well as a recounting of a recent trip to Rome, which is a really pleasant city.
