

The Dying Man

The Dying Man is a Socratic dialog between an elderly dying man and a Catholic priest who has been summoned to perform the final rites known as Extreme Unction. The dying man is prepared for death, however, he wants to enjoy one last discussion relative to questions of existence, and his life-long search for Truth. The dying man believes that Gods plan fell into mans hands and was bent, spindled, and mutilated. As he lays dying he finds the priest an unwilling opponent. The priest is a young man of sincere belief and strong faith. He wants to hear the dying mans last confession, and give him Extreme Unction. He has no patience for philosophical questions. Little does he know that he is about to experience a mental journey that will lead him into uncharted territory. It is an experience that will change his approach to God and truth forever.
