

British Submarine vs Italian Torpedo Boat: Mediterranean 1940-43 (Duel)

As the war in North Africa escalated, Axis military efforts became increasingly dependent on supply lines across the Mediterranean. To try to sever these lines of supply, the British deployed submarines from the besieged island of Malta with the directive to sink as much merchant convoy tonnage as possible. Italy responded by sending her torpedo boats to protect and escort Axis convoys. Featuring specially commissioned full-color artwork and carefully chosen archive photographs, this engaging study assesses the evolving battle between Britains submarines and Italys torpedo boats in the struggle for primacy in the Mediterranean at the height of World War II.
