

Women in Islam

A study of women in Islam. The text does not pretend that the society of Islam was dominated by women but illustrates that the world from the classical period to modern times is also a woman's world. There are tales of Aisha, who joined the forces of early followers of Mohammed in the disastrous Battle of Uhud; the fighter Umm Omara, who lost a hand in battle; the scholar of mysticism and freed slave Rabia al-Adawiyya; Khayzuran, the richest and most powerful woman; the poet Wallada, daughter of the Spanish Khalif. Slave dancers and boy-girls, students, wives, and occasionally even career women, are all featured. The book also contains a collection of illustrations showing how women both represented themselves and were represented. The book interweaves the history of Islam with the role of Muslim women in traditional Islamic countries.
