We all long for a passionate life. Few people find it. But all of us can! This book was written for two types of people: those who are having a mid-life crisis; and those who should be! The Ten Lifestyle Types in How to have a mid-life crisis™ offers a framework to rediscover your most passionate life. A mid-life crisis is an opportunity to understand what makes you unique and interesting, how to design a life which brings you the most meaning, purpose and satisfaction, and reinvigorate the work, interests and relationships most important to you, as an expression of your authentic and passionate self. The author's™ mid-life crisis was triggered by breast cancer that left her fat, frumpy and old before her time. She realised that if she didn't™ do something different, the battle with cancer would have been for nothing, except to take the best part of two years of her life. So she made a fateful decision one day to transform her life, to end up better off after cancer than before it – more fit and healthy, more beautiful, more adventurous, more passionate and more fulfilled. It worked. Part One of How to have a mid-life crisis™ is the author's™ story of her post-cancer malaise and how she battled it and transformed her life to regain her youthfulness, vigour and passion for life. Part Two of the book contains the tools the author has developed to help you transform your own life. Use the Ten Lifestyle Types to discover your primary and secondary lifestyle type, and from those, identify your core values. Once you know what values are most important to you “ in other words, what brings you the most satisfaction, meaning and purpose in life “ you can design a lifestyle which targets those values, and rediscover a whole new joy in life!
