The Irrationality of Religion
According to an explanation I heard while I was in college in Italy, Christianity was the creation of people who had willingly or unwillingly consumed hallucinogens, the most common one being the Claviceps purpurea fungus which affects many types of cereals, including rye and wheat, and from which LSD is derived. The consumption of grains contaminated with this fungus causes ergotism, and this explains the rite of the Holy Communion. The early Christians who shared contaminated bread when they took the Communion suffered from communal hallucinations. The inclusion of wine in the ceremony would have intensified the symptoms. Christianity started out as a religion that addressed the needs of the poorest segments of society, people who were ignorant and oftentimes hungry, and were therefore susceptible to the power of suggestion. By offering bread and wine, the priests convinced them to attend mass. Those who consumed contaminated bread suffered hallucinations in which they experienced the phenomena that the priests had described to them. Have you ever wondered why God "ours" and those of other religions "and the Virgin and the Apostles and the Saints no longer make their appearances on Earth? Iâ€™d say itâ€™s because steps are now taken to prevent the consumption of foodstuffs contaminated with Claviceps purpurea.
